Generosity Conquered the only Confederate Officer Outlawed. Collonel John Mosby, the famous confederate raider, recently made a visit in Atlanta, Ga., and received much attention from the confederate veterans there. O. e of them asked him how he came to ally himself with the republican party, which he answered by saying:

"I surrendered at Lynchburg. I think in I I was about the last man to give in. I do know anyway that I was the only confederate officer who was outlawed by the United States government. When Lessurrendered I was in the lower end of the valley with about four hundred men. General Hancock was at Winchester with 40,000. He demanded my surrender and I declined to comply, asking for a ten days' truce, because I wanted to know what General Johnson was going to do, Hancock telegraphed Secretary Stanton the situation, saying that he would, under a flag of truce, have a conference with me, Stanton thought Hancock intended to come in person and had surrendered and went to my father's General Gregg telegraphed to Washington and was told to receive me, and give memy parole. This was brought tome and on the day agreed upon I went to Lyachburg in a buggy and went to mybrother's one once more. It lugged the leg in its law office. For safety I carried my pistols with me and laid them down on the table in the office. I then sent word to General Gregg that I was in town and ready to surrender.

"In the mean time," the colonel continued after a passe, "General Gregghad been instructed by Secretary Stanton to arrest me and send me on. Gregg was an honorable man. He knew that I had come in on his statement, that I would be paroled, and he sent a man to me telling me of his subsequent orders. The man said something about arresting me and I picked up my pistols, saying; 'I come here to be paroled and not arrested, and I'll kill the man who tries to take me.' The man left with a peculiar smile and I got out of Lynchburg. Gregg did not molest me then, but twenty-four hours intersent a sound to arrest me. They went to my father's house, but of course I wasn't there. General Gregg finally gotan order from General Grant to parole me. Then I went in and gave myself up. I became an ad-mirer of Grant and ought to have been. I have been censured for it, but not by those who know the story.

"With my parole I went to Warrenton, Va., and sat down to law. Every time I'd leave the county some petty provost-marshal would arrest me. It was a ceaseless annoyance, besides being was a ceaseless annoyance, besides being a constant source of anxiety to my wife and children. My wife left home for Baltimore and in passing through Washington without my knowledge decided to call on President Johnson. Her father and Johnson had been bosom friends before the war and had been in the same congress. She made herself known to Johnson, and he not only refused her request buttreated her rudely. As she was leaving the white house, my son Beverly, a boy seven years old, 'Mamma, go and see General

"Mrs. Mosby did go and see General Grant. He received her kindly and treated her with the greatest courtesy. When he had heard her through he wrote me a passport, which was ever after a protection, and I have that letter now in General Grant's own hand writing in my trunk at San Francisco.

"Then in '73," he went on, "when Grant and Greeley were before the people Grant was terribly abused, and I took the stump for him to refute the abuse, and these were the only political speeches I ever made. I never accepted saything from Grant, because I promised the people in my speeches I never would.

'How many times were you wounded?" the colonel was asked. "Six times; and I cary a Yankee bullet in my thigh now. "Were you ever captured?"

"No, but I had two or three mighty narrow escapes, In December, 1864, after some hard fighting with Illinois troops, in which we were scattered, I, with Tommy Love, one of my best men. stopped one night at a Mr. Lake's, near Rector's Crossroads. Our horses were hitched outside the yard and a squad of Yankees in passing saw them. They surrounded the house and one of them shot at methrough the window. The ball struck me in the side and passed around to my back-bone. I knew I was hard hit, but before the Yankees came in my coat was under the bed. I had put my hand on the bloody wound and smeared it over my mouth, giving me the appearance of an internal hemor-rhage. The Yankees did not know me. They thought I was one of Mosby's mon, but they were unable to prove it. I looked as if I was done for, and after taking my clothing and boots they left. I knew that as soon as they went into my pockets they'd find out who I was and would come back for me, so I got the family to put me in an ox-cart, cover me with fodder and a negro drove me away. Soon after I was gone the Yankees came galloping back. They had found whose clothing they had and they wanted me. But I was safe in the

The Colonel hesitated a second and then, with a peculiar smile, remarked: "And do you know, that negro ran away the very next day."

Couldn't Fine a Gentleman. Many stories of the generosity of the late General Leonard Jerome are floating about, but one that is quite curious seems, so far, to have escaped attention. At the time when his younger brother was a student at Williams college, Mr. Jeroine donated a handsome sum, the interest of which was to provide an annual gold medal for the "most perfect gentleman" of the graduating class.

The faculty found so much difficulty in defining the characteristics of a gentleman that the donation was afterward

Queer O a Hermit.

There is a queer character living the life of a hermit near the town of Hamilton, N. Y. His hermitage is a dilapi-dated old farm house in a lonely spot of the town, invisible from the highway and distant from other dwellings. His name is Thomas Church and his age is eighty one years. He was born in the farm house and has spent the long years of his life on the seventy-acre home-stead, keeping strictly apart from and wholly indifferent to the world outside its bounds. He never has slept a night nor eaten a meal outside of the house. He never role in a stage coach nor railroad car nor attended a show of any kind. He never sent or received a letter, never took a newspaper and never voted at any election He has never had but one timepiece in the house and that is a 100-year old clock that he inherited from his father. He has never bought a new suit of clothes, but continues to wear the patched and faded garments spun and weven from the wool and made up by his mother years ago. He lived as a batchelor until long after his parents were dead and until he had passed middle age, and then, to the astenishment of everybody who knew the pair, he married an old maid neighbor who was as solitary and eccentric in her habits as himself. She died six years ago, and since that event he has lived alone, except as he has had the companionship of a favorite dog. He says that he never found any pleasure in mingling with the outside world, and is only supremely happy and con-tented in his "dear old home." The few neighbors who have had occasional intercourse with him unite in saying that he is the soul of integrity and as guileless as a child.

Wanted to Pledge Marriage Licenses. William Harmon and John Tillotston of Charlotte were engaged to marry two girls of Eaton Rapids, Mich., but the wedding did not take place. It leaked out that Harmon and Tillotston procured their marriage licenses and felt so good over the matter that they went out to have a drink. One followed another and they were very drunk when they went after the girls. The prespective brides were together at the time of their arrival, and declared the match off. This made the young men very melancholy, and to drown their grief they again had to take to the flowing bowl, and kept at ituntil all their money was gone. The next noon they were to drunk to know what they were about, and being hungry went to the hotel to get a dinner, offering toleave their marriage licenses as collateral. It would not work and the pair had to walk home without either brides or dinner.

Down in Kentucky there was a trial recently in which the fact was brought out that John Harvey called William Tillman aliar 150 times, a sheep thief seventy-one times, a swindler fifty-two times and offered to lick him 104 times. At this juncture William concluded that time for him to vindicate his wounded honor, and so he called in and gave John a thrashing. The jury, after hinking the matter over, concluded that he ought to have started in an hour and a half earlier.

St. Sebastian river Florida, related the particular sof a most desperate encoun-ter between an alligator and a shark. The engineers had pitched their tents near the river and just above its mouth, and were eating their dinner beneath a small clump of palms. All at once their attention was attracted to a violent commotion in the water near the shore. At first the bodies were so active and made the spray, intermingled with blood, so heavy that they could not make out what the two objects were. Finally, after about half an hour of such work, the monsters seemed to be growing weak and weary. It was then discovered to be a fight to the death between a large alligator and a man-eating shark. The former seemed to be trying to get to shallow water, while the shark was equally determined not to go. The fight was still going on although growing less vigorous all the time, when one of the parties got his winchester and shot them both. On pulling them ashore the alligator was found minus a foreleg, bit as smoth as if cut off with a sergeon's knife. The shark had numerous ugly gasheson his body which would probably have killed him soon. The party skinned the alligator and saved some of the teeth of the shark as mementoes of this singular and sanguinary encounter.
